

Budget Advocacy

accountability $ collaboration $ revenue maximization

P r o j e c t

November 13, 2002

Where is the $$$? Where are the services?

One of the fundamental reasons why the District should develop and regularly publish a children's budget is so that all budget consumers -- elected officials, government officials, residents, service providers, funders, federal officials, businesses, and the faith community -- can determine what funding is directed to children, youth and their families.

Some of the agencies that provide services to young people and their families or provide funding for these services are:

DC Energy Office
Child and Family Services Agency
Criminal Justice Coordinating Council
Charter Schools
DC Public Library
DC Public Schools
Metropolitan Police Department
Emergency Management
State Education Office
Office of the Corporation Counsel
Commission on the Arts and Humanities
Department of Human Services
Department of Health
Office of Latino Affairs
DCFD
Department of Mental Health
University of the District of Columbia
Department of Employment Services

DC Action for Children
1616 P St. NW, Suite 420 Washington, DC 20036
(202) 234-9404 $ (202) 234-9108 fax $ dcaction@dckids.org $ www.dckids.org